Water-filtered infrared-A (wIRA) as a special form of heat radiation with a high tissue penetration and with a low thermal load to the skin surface acts both by thermal and thermic as well as by non-thermal and non-thermic effects. wIRA produces a therapeutically usable field of heat in the tissue and increases tissue temperature, tissue oxygen partial pressure, and tissue perfusion. Abstract. A great number of skin diseases are caused by viruses. Skin lesions are either the manifestation of direct infection of the skin with dermatotropic viruses (e.g., verruca vulgaris, molluscum contagiosum) or else develop in the course of a general viral disease (e.g., varicella). The experience of the pleasant heat of the sun in moderate climatic zones arises from the filtering of the heat radiation of the sun by water vapor in the atmosphere of the earth. The filter effect of water decreases those parts of infrared radiation (most parts of infrared-B and -C and the.
